For the Greater Good of Our Place: Living, Learning and Leading with Global Diversity and Local Inclusion from Holistic Higher Learning (Paperback)

By Joseph Martin Stevenson, Carrine H. Bishop, Jacquelyn C. Franklin

Academica Press, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 221 x 150 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. The authors have not considered a traditional executive summary for this book so that readers will read and absorb the entire the book to capture the essence, content and scope of this timely publication. Their experience has been that, too often, college students limit their reading of material about race to synopses versus synergies of information. The primary purpose of this holistic handbook is to provide guiding prescriptive principles toward institutionalization of policies and practices that foster global diversity and local inclusion in institutions of higher learning in the aftermath of the unsettling and disturbing racial incidents in the Deep South following the re-election President Barack H. Obama. Ironically, President Obama was criticised in 2013 for the lack leadership diversity (especially women) among his cabinet and senior staff. In any event, this handbook has been conceptualized based on the individual, collective and culminating Southern cotton to experiences of the five authors from both predominantly/historically White institutions of higher learning (PWIs) and predominately/historically Black institutions of higher learning (HBCUs). Both institutional communities can use this book to create campus climate and culture...
