It shows signs of a matriarchal society and also creates independent authorities. In the following I will analyse the way in which McEwan transports this political novel and in doing so I will put a focus on the kultur- und zivilisationskritischen Aspekte, who earn the main respect of the novel. By the establishing of matriarchal structures on an individual and also societal level, the children find a way of rediscovering the possibilities of interpersonal communication and by experiencing erotic sensuality, a relationship not only to the outer but also to the inner nature can be newly built, and by this they free themselves of limiting conventions temporarily, nevertheless, the excitement felt at the beginning won't be of long duration. McEwan already topicalises the sexually-gewahr werden, den erotischen Lustgewinn und die problematische psychische...
