I have largely limited my investigations to the habits and industry of spiders, as the matters which seemed most important at this stage of scientific knowledge. None but the field naturalist can fully know and appreciate the difficulties of my task. To these ordinary obstacles have been added special hindrances of my own. The cabinet or laboratory student, with his pinned and alcoholic specimens, is largely independent of outward condition; but he who studies nature as a living thing is the servant of seasons, hours, moods. He must live amidst the life which he would see, and seize the opportunities as they come, or lose his venture for that season or year, or perhaps wholly. The duties of day calling in a large city have held me rigorously away from the open country except during two months of the year. Summer vacations, and such leisure hours as a most busy life would allow, have been given to the pleasant task of following my little friends of the aranead world into their retreats, and watching at the doors of their fragile domiciles for such secrets of their career as they might happen to uncover. Occasional excursions at other times were unavoidably brief, and often broken off at the point of promised discoveries. I have, in part, indeed, overcome this obstacle by transporting and colonizing specimens, and by directing the observations of others. But, at the...
