But do not continue the recital if you feel in the least fatigued. Fatigued! she repeated; just as though a woman could tire of talking. If you will listen I will relate one moie series of incidents which shortly after befel me, for you must know the nature of my mission necessarily led me into many awkward and perplexing situations, and sometimes most dangerous ones. For the two following days after my recent narrow escape, I kept myself closely confined to my quarters, employing my time chiefly in writing and drawing. Besides, I had other reasons for keeping close, not the least of which was to be prepared for an uadertaking that I felt necessary for the grand accomplishment of my mission within the enemy s stronghold. On the third morning Mrs. Ramsey, who, in fact, was my only attendant, and I might say my confidant, --although we seemed to understand each other without much conversation--came into my room and placed in my hands a parcel containing clothing, saying, simply, that, although the clothes had come a day later than agreed upon, all possible despatch had been used to get them ready. This apology was entirely superfluous, for no agreement had been made with me in reference to any clothing. She also placed in my hand a sealed envelope, without any address, which, as soon as she retired from the room, I opened. It contained a brief note and also an unsealed envelope. The former...
