Excerpt: . . . the United States, the tidings which diffused through the country the knowledge of the loss it had sustained, were everywhere received with becoming expressions of respect and mourning. The Bench and Bar, in almost every State, paid the honours of a recorded testimony to their opinion of the merits of William Wirt. A large circle of friends in Maryland and Virginia--the first, the land of his birth and latest residence; the other, that of his most cherished associations--lamented him, gone, with an affectionate remembrance which few men were able so profoundly to inspire ; and that nearer group, which nature had allied to his blood and kindred, ever amongst whom his coming was a gladness, and his presence a centre of continual joy and love, bewailed his loss with a grief too sacred for the intrusive notice of these pages. CHAPTER XXI. HIS PERSONAL...
