Ralph Randolph Gurley I am distressed for thee, my brother.: very pleasant hast thou been unto me. - II Samuel, 1: 26. The distress of David at the death of Jonathan, his faithful friend and bi other, was very deep and overwhelming. The love which the noble young prince had manifested for him, a love unselfish, strong, and unchanging in the most trying circumstances - a love which had separated him from his royal father, placed an insuperable obstacle between him and the throne of the kingdom, and finally led him to give up life itself on the disastrous battle-field of Gilboa - all this love passes vividly before him, and fills with its presence his whole being. The future, just opening before him - its vacant throne, its promises of power and glory, its ambitions and its bloody strifes - is forgotten in the sad present, and in the pleasant memories of his friend - Very pleasant hast thou been unto me, my brother:...
